In 2014, the last owner of this Lakeview residence felt that the price of the house and the amount of the contract were fair. Three years later, in 2017, the buyer offered a check to the seller for full payment, as required by the contract. The seller said, "Sure," but the buyer never received the deed. The seller did receive a letter with a link to a website offering help selling the property. In 2017, the seller was approached by a realtor to sell the property. The buyer had not been able to get the seller to acknowledge the full payment, and the buyer expressed a willingness to pay the debt from the loan, but on interest. The seller was prepared to sell but wanted to preserve her full rights to the property. In 2017, the seller discovered she had a buyer and approached this buyer for a deal. The buyer agreed to reduce the price of the property by $22,000. The buyer had also paid $7,000 to the seller in 2017 for "improvements" to the property. When the seller discovered she had a buyer for the property she sued to regain her full rights to the property and also tried to rescind the contract for fraud based on the $22,000 cash payment the buyer made e79caf774b

TOP REVIEWED FEMALE MISER NANAK.Q: how to use ORACLE_HOME variable during Spring Boot Gradle build I'm running the Gradle build for a Spring Boot microservice that uses JDBC/MySQL dependencies that I have built using Maven. It depends on a MySQL JDBC Driver. In my ~/.bash_profile I define the following environmental variables:
ORACLE_HOME=/data01/Oracle/oracle12c/
PATH=/data01/Oracle/oracle12c/bin:$PATH JAVA_HOME=/data01/Java/jdk1.8.0_121
When I run the Gradle build, the build fails due to a JDBC Driver mismatch. It seems like it is not picking up the PATH I defined in my.bash_profile. My project includes the following dependency compile group: 'com.oracle', name: 'ojdbc6', version: '11.2.0' I have included the Spring Boot classpath on my build: runtimeClasspath { baseClasspath = files(fileTree(projectDir: "${projectDir}/build/classes/main")) classpath += ':build/classes/main' } Spring Boot uses runtimeClasspath and this seems to cause the problem. The application is always looking for the MySQL JDBC Driver in my ~/.bash_profile instead of the the one in my JDK. I think it is trying to find the JDBC driver I have locally, not the one I have defined in my path environment variable. How can I specify to find the MySQL JDBC Driver in /data01/Oracle/oracle12c? A: The best way to set these in your gradle.properties file (if you are using Gradle 4) is: org.gradle
