The primary aim of the article is to provide a comprehensive approach to the surgical management of malignant oral tumors, taking into consideration the complex interactions between oral cancer and the host immune system. The concept of surgery for the removal of malignant tumors should be a multidisciplinary approach, which includes the availability of the surgeons with expertise in oncologic surgery. The choice of surgical intervention depends on the size and location of the tumor, the grade and stage of the disease, and the type of tumor (primary or recurrent). The type of surgical procedure to be used should be chosen according to the type of lesion (eg, soft tissue lesion, bone lesion), the stage of the disease, the availability of reconstructive techniques, and the estimated morbidity of each procedure. The aim of surgical resection is to remove the entire lesion with the purpose of achieving a definitive cure, as well as to control local or systemic disease and to restore or preserve function. Over the past 20 years, the surgical management of oral cancer has changed and become more conservative. Various types of
